As we near end of the current administration, it is time to reflect upon how Enterprise Architecture has matured as a management discipline and how it is now visibly beginning to markedly drive change and improve delivery of government services. Accordingly, ArchitecturePlus would like to dedicate its agenda for the balance of the calendar year to highlight the EA tools now available to practitioners to drive change.

Our session today focuses on Governance processes that we are using to bridge the gap with decision makers. We will be looking at how organizationally we need to begin to realign how we interact with our fellow management disciplines to enhance their ability to accomplish their stated missions.

In the coming months we will be holding both our regularly scheduled and special sessions that will focus on:

- continued maturation of Enterprise Architecture as management discipline, it is time to reflect on our the Federal Enterprise Architecture Program Management Office, the Architecture and Infrastructure Committee of the Federal CIO Council, the Chief Architects Forum and the Enterprise Architecture – Shared Interest Group of the Industry Advisory Council
